

Claiming God's Promises

One side of the coin is confessing sin biblically. The other side is claiming the promises of God or utilizing faith-rest. Faith-rest is habitually claiming the promises of God with the resultant inner peace and stability that God gives. It is for believers only. It has nothing to do with the power of positive thinking so prevalent today. Heb. 3:7 - Heb. 4:16; Exodus 17; Num. 20. See category on The Faith-Rest Life.

A few of God's 7,000+ promises in the Bible that are pertinent to the Christian are listed below. Faith-rest can be exercised in this way; "Since all things work together for good, I know God has a plan for my life. Not everything may be good, but it will work together for good. Taking Romans 8:28 by faith, I can cast my cares upon Him before they even happen and by faith give thanks for every happenstance, good or bad (from my viewpoint) because of His plan. After all, the battle is the Lord's because He is faithful. I don't have the spirit of fear because He gives power, love, and soundness of mind when I continue in fellowship believing His promises. My mental attitude is stabilized by knowing that if God is for me, who can be against me? After all, He did the big thing in saving me, how easily He can take care of my daily living."

God's promises are daily fuel for the faith-rest life. These are to be used instead of worry! These are to be used upon rising in the morning and throughout the day. The Christian life can be wonderful by using God's promises consistently and faithfully. You'll be glad you did.
